Belgium-Europe: [Paul Henri Spaak apparently has shifted his position in important respects on the question of how European political integration can best be promoted.]

[Contrary to views he has held for several years, Spaak now appears to favor an early initiative to form a loose confederation of European states without insisting on British participation. His reason for this is a belief that French policy has become more flexible in recent weeks and the opportunity should be seized to push Paris in the direction of integration. He is also convinced that the British have no intention of merging politically with the continent in any way at present.]

[Spaak's first step would be the creation of a political commission comparable to the EEC's Commission which has spearheaded the movement toward Europe's economic integration.]

NOTES

Venezuela: There has been a new outbreak of sabotage in the oil producing area of eastern Venezuela. On 25 November, five petroleum pipelines operated by US companies were ruptured and the largest storage tank in the region, also US owned, was blown up. These incidents are the first major instances of sabotage reported from this part of the country since the arson at the Goodyear Tire Company of 6 November.
